Della Penta ‘69 Leads Fischer Scientific

David Della Penta worked two jobs during weekends and school vacations to attend RIT.

By day, the class of ‘69 College of Business grad worked as a crane operator in a steel mill, and by night, he cleaned, cooked, washed dishes and tended bar at his father’s neighborhood restaurant, Tommy’s Hideaway, in Schenectady, N.Y.

A hectic start for the president and chief operating officer of Fisher Scientific International, Inc., headquartered in Hampton, N.H. Since Della Penta joined Fisher in April 1998, the company has grown significantly from $2.25 billion in revenues to more than $5.2 billion (projected for 2005, based on Fisher’s merger this year with Apogent Technologies).

“I went from a $250 million company, Nalge Nunc, a subsidiary of Sybron International, and walked into a 100-year-old company with staggering technologies and revenues,” said Della Penta, who served as president of the Rochester-based, Nalge Nunc from 1989 to 1998.

“Luckily, I spent the last 35 years in the same industry of scientific laboratory supply,” Della Penta explains. “However, it took me six months physically and emotionally to learn everything I needed to know after joining Fisher.”

Although Della Penta has come a long way since working his way through college, he has not forgotten what he learned at RIT or his favorite professor, Dr. Eugene Fram, with whom he still keeps in contact.

“As a teacher, Gene constantly made you think by challenging the status quo,” recalls Della Penta, who also graduated from RIT’s Advanced Management Program in 1981. “He would have you concentrate on the smaller percentages because they could easily be overlooked while looking at the bigger picture. And sometimes, those little numbers can make all the difference in the success or failure of a project.”

If success can be measured, Della Penta also believes in daily exercise and healthy doses of “time outs” with his wife, Karen. They live with their dog, Arles, and two Maine coon cats, Vincent and Theo, in the seacoast area of New Hampshire, and they also spend time at their winter home in La Quinta, Calif. Della Penta’s hobbies include weekly rounds of golf, as well as fishing, and hunting deer and pheasant in season.

“I wouldn’t be where I am today at Fisher without leading a balanced life,” Della Penta says. “It relieves stress and keeps you in contact with what’s important in life, like family and friends.

“One of the most influential people in my life is my daughter, Nikki, who graduated from high school and went to New York without attending college,” Della Penta notes. “She became a Rockette, then spent four years auditioning and being rejected for parts on Broadway. But each time she would dust herself off and try again. She now plays the role of Phyllis in ‘42nd Street.’”

Similarly, Della Penta remembers a time in 1970 when he was delivered a one-two-punch.

“I couldn’t believe it,” he laughs. “On my first day at Sybron I was called up for the draft and ended up spending the next four months in the Army National Guard. You always have to be prepared for the unexpected.”

And being prepared is crucial to success in the business world, says Della Penta, who believes students from RIT will need to work extra hard to compete for jobs in the industry.

“They need to set high standards for themselves and carry through, have high integrity and honesty, be able to cultivate a team environment, be creative and think outside the box, communicate on advanced levels, and remain positive and have fun in life,” Della Penta advises.

“The greatest thing you can say after working for as many years as I have is that you still love your job—and I do.”
Dean’s Message

Dr. Thomas D. Hopkins, Dean

In today’s globally-competitive environment, schools of business must endow their students with the international perspective needed for success in their careers. This is a task the RIT College of Business has accepted with enthusiasm and pursues with vigor. With faculty members from many parts of the world—including China, Bangladesh, Turkey, the Ivory Coast, Scotland—the international diversity of our faculty is eclipsed only by that of our students, who travel each year to the College of Business from over twenty countries from around the globe.

I am proud of the depth of international diversity we have achieved within the walls of the College of Business, but it would be doing a great disservice to our students to limit their exposure to foreign cultures and customs to that which takes place in the classroom. Today, College of Business students have many opportunities to expand their global perspective through study abroad learning experiences. I am especially excited about two such programs.

The first is a partnership with Arcadia University in Guadalajara, Mexico. This past summer Carol Ferrara and Amy Kennicutt, both fourth year international business students, became the first College of Business students to participate in this program. While living with host families in Guadalajara, taking full time classes, and participating in community service activities, Carol and Amy were adopted as full members of the local community. This experience afforded them the opportunity to develop an understanding of Mexican culture shared by few of their peers. I have no doubt this experience will be of great value as they advance in their careers.

A study abroad opportunity that I expect will become increasingly popular is that with Denmark’s International Study Program, located in Denmark and Europe, the DIS International Business and Economics Program is an attractive option for students looking to gain a solid knowledge of the European business environment.

By embracing the learning opportunity such programs represent, our students are preparing themselves to become leaders of tomorrow’s business community. We should be proud of these soon-to-be members of our alumni family, and should be looking to their future with great anticipation. Their success will reflect well upon the quality of the education RIT College of Business students receive, and of the high caliber of its alumni. I encourage you to read through these pages of Dividends and learn more of the successes of our students, alumni and faculty members, and to learn how you can become an active member of our ever growing and ever more esteemed alumni community.

From RIT Roommates to Corporate Teammates

“I t’s Microsoft country out here,” proclaims Christine (Young) McCullugh from her office in Redmond, Washington. As President of LTC Solutions, Inc, a company McCullugh founded in 1996, she doesn’t claim to be the next Bill Gates, but the future certainly does look bright for this 1988 graduate of the RIT College of Business management program.

In just a few short years, LTC Solutions, a company specializing in long-term care insurance for employer groups, has grown to employ sixteen full-time employees, eighty independent salespeople nationwide, and last year boasted a healthy $5 million in revenues.

Balancing the demands of building your own business, raising a family, and maintaining a life outside of work is difficult for even the most seasoned entrepreneurs. Fortunately for McCullugh, she’s had help from a familiar source, namely Rosemary (Ciaschi) Cullivan ’88, fellow RIT College of Business alumna, former Colony Manor roommate, and now Christine’s Vice President of the Eastern Region.

“We met while sitting next to each other in a human resources class at RIT,” says McCullugh, “we discovered we were actually from the same home town, and from there hit it off right away.” It wasn’t long before the two were best of friends, and later decided to share an apartment in Colony Manor. “We loved our time at RIT. We were always good students, but we made sure we had time to enjoy the social aspect of RIT as well,” says Cullivan.

After graduation the duo moved to Boston, MA where McCullugh accepted a position with American Express selling long-term care insurance policies to individuals in search of coverage. While working her way to Regional Sales Manager, in charge of Oregon, McCullugh devised a unique idea to reach a greater number of potential clients in a fraction of the time.

“Rather than selling policies one-at-a-time, I thought why not work with corporations to offer policies to all of their employees. Essentially, rather than spinning the little wheel 100 times, I was hoping to spin a giant wheel just once, and reach much larger audiences in the process.” Armed with that concept, McCullugh moved to Redmond, WA in 1996 to try her hand as an entrepreneur, forming LTC Solutions, Inc.

Cullivan in the meantime chose to stay in Boston to pursue a career with Xerox, where after 13 years she rose to the rank of National Brand Manager. “I was doing really well at Xerox, but in 2000 when I found out I was pregnant with my second child, I knew it was time for a career change. I needed the flexibility to spend more time with my family,” says Cullivan.

“After talking with Christine about my decision to leave Xerox, it was clear that LTC Solutions, Inc. represented an opportunity to get the best of both worlds; I could have the flexibility I needed to spend time with my family without giving up my career.” And just like that, Cullivan joined the LTC Solutions team as the company’s Vice President of the Eastern Region.

Today, the future of LTC Solutions, Inc. has never looked brighter. “There is a ton of untapped market potential in the long-term care insurance industry, and right now LTC Solutions, Inc. is really the only organization working with employers to provide coverage for groups of employees.” McCullugh continues, “But that doesn’t mean we’re not expecting future competition. We’re working to strengthen our relationships within the industry and build on our unique ability to communicate to employers the importance of enrolling in a long-term care insurance program. These core skills can’t be learned overnight,” says McCullugh.

With the competition in check, and plenty of opportunity for growth, budding entrepreneurs may be wondering what advice McCullugh would share with them. “Recognize your strengths,” she says simply. “I love to socialize—to build relationships. It’s how I met Rosemary, my husband, and it’s through relationship building that LTC Solutions, Inc. will continue to grow well into the future.”

Michael Finney Named Minett Professor

Michael Finney, CEO of Greater Rochester Enterprise (GRE) has been named the 2004-2005 Minett Professor. GRE, a public-private partnership established with an initial $14 million investment budget, was created to professionally market the Rochester metropolitan area as a competitive, high-profile region for business location and growth.

“Finney brings with him a breadth of experience in regional economic development. In working with students in our MBA and Executive MBA programs we hope to further the GRE’s ambitions of attracting businesses to the Rochester area, and hope to explore the issues associated with bringing firms from outside the United States to Rochester,” said COB Dean, Dr. Thomas Hopkins.

Finney has over twenty-five years of professional experience in the private sector and local government. Prior to joining GRE, Finney served as Vice President of Emerging Business Sectors for the Michigan Economic Development Corporation. In that capacity, he was responsible for developing a strong business climate that fostered the growth of the Advanced Manufacturing, Life Sciences and Information Technology business sectors. He was also responsible for coordinating industry-university commercialization and technology transfer initiatives, and for growing the state’s venture capital base.

The Minett Professorship is awarded each year to a distinguished Rochester-area minority professional. Awardees teach classes in their area of expertise on a part-time basis and take part in select campus-wide programs.
Patricia Phillips '90 MBA - A Rochester Civic Leader

“Take your own advice,” is what Patricia’s husband, Randy, told her one fateful Sunday morning. While perusing the want-ads, College of Business alumna Patricia Phillips ’90 MBA, had stumbled across a job posting by Drake, Beam, Morin, now DBM, an internationally-recognized firm specializing in human resource solutions.

“I had always been intrigued by people’s career choices. I wanted to know where they worked, how they got there, and how they liked it,” said Phillips.

An ardent student of career assessment tests, Phillips would tell her friends that the best way to advance their careers was to “figure out what they like to do, and to do it. The money would follow.” With a little prodding from her husband, Phillips decided to take her own advice.

Having spent twelve years in the finance industry, two years with IBM, a job she found while on co-op in the RIT MBA program, and ten years with Chase Manhattan Bank, where she rose to Vice President, Phillips had a world of financial expertise at her fingertips. While she enjoyed the analytical nature of the financial industry, it was her work building relationships with individuals in different industries that Phillips liked best. It was these relationships that earned Phillips her position with DBM.

“Unlike most of the 200 people who also applied for the job, I didn’t have a background in human resources or psychology. What I did have was a ready network of employers I had been working with for over a decade,” said Phillips.

Phillips has achieved great success in her new career. She was named a member of the Rochester Business Journal’s “40 Under 40,” an award recognizing business leaders under the age of 40 who have excelled in their career and have also made significant civic contributions to the Rochester community.

“It was great to be recognized for something beyond career achievements,” said Phillips.

An eight-year volunteer for Lifespan, a non-profit agency dedicated to providing information, guidance and services that help older adults prepare for the second half of life, Phillips has served as both Treasurer and Vice Chairperson of the Board of Directors. Phillips’ civic involvement doesn’t end there. In 2003 she was selected to take part in Leadership Rochester, an organization whose mission is to educate and engage Rochester community leaders in overcoming the many challenges facing the Greater Rochester community.

“T would like to consider myself a useful resource for economic development and professional & career advancement for others,” said Phillips.

“Changes in Rochester’s economic structure and the resulting pressures on the area’s work force make individuals like Patricia Phillips an exceptionally valuable asset to our community,” COB Dean, Dr. Thomas Hopkins continued, “We in Rochester are fortunate to claim this COB alumna as one of our own.”

Alumni Flock to Campus for Brick City Festival 2004!

Among the year-long celebration of RIT’s 175th anniversary, the dedication of the much anticipated Gordon Field House & Activity Center, and the recent addition of other campus landmarks including the Kodak Quad, and The Sentinel, Albert Paley’s seven-story, 110-ton sculpture, RIT alumni have plenty of reasons to return to campus. That’s exactly what happened at the forth annual Alumni Weekend celebration held during Brick City Festival this past October.

A record 5,068 alumni, students, parents, faculty & staff flocked to campus to take part in this year’s festivities, which included an address by Horton Speaker, actor, director, and Golden Globe nominee Robert Redford, a comedy show featuring former Saturday Night Live writer and performer David Spade, and a visit by the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, which kicked off the festivities with a concert in the Gordon Field House & Activity Center.

College of Business alums were invited to meet with Dean Thomas Hopkins for his presentation “The College of Business; Past, Present & Future,” in which Dean Hopkins took a look at how the College of Business plans to continue to be a national leader in preparing students to excel in today’s business environment. Other College of Business faculty members including Professors Pamela Neely, Roberta Klein, and Dr. Bud Kearns were on hand to discuss topics of interest ranging from the new Management Information System curriculum, and how it will better position its graduates for success in the rapidly evolving 21st century economy, to a discussion of managerial accounting and its role in determining product cost & quality.

If you weren’t able to take part in this year’s festivities, begin making plans for next year now! Alumni Weekend at Brick City festival will be held October 6-9, 2005.

Patricia Phillips ’90 MBA, Managing Consultant, DBM.

Alumni from around the country and world returned to campus this past October to participate in the 4th annual Alumni Weekend held during Brick City Festival, an all campus celebration encompassing Alumni Weekend, Reunion and Family Weekend.
Two RIT Students are Thirsty for Business Success

Here’s a drink to your health: Famous body builder Ernie Taylor blends two cans of tuna fish, a diet Coke, and a banana—and he drinks it twice a day!

Or there’s Anatoly Shilman & Marc-Anthony Arena’s meal replacement smoothies: flavors like chocolate and peanut butter that taste like a Reese’s candy bar or fruit juice mixed with frozen berries and a fresh banana that resembles a thick and creamy milkshake. Both are this month’s featured favorites at Shaker’s Blends, a new juice bar located at RIT’s new Gordon Field House and Activities Center.

Shaker’s Blends is an entrepreneurial success story for Shilman and Arena, who opened the juice bar on campus this past August. Shaker’s Blends began as an ambitious project entry in RIT’s Undergraduate Business Plan Competition last January. Shilman and Arena, who are close friends and fraternity brothers in Sigma Alpha Epsilon, received a third-prize award of $1,000 for their Shaker’s Blends plan.

“But we’re number one because we have turned our plan into a real business,” says Shilman. “We couldn’t have done it without the support of RIT and the people who believed in us, like Richard DeMartino (assistant professor of management in the College of Business) and Jim Watters (RIT’s vice president of finance and administration). Whenever we encountered a problem, they helped us with a solution.”

With business booming, Shilman and Arena hope to sell the idea of Shaker’s Blends in athletic centers on campuses across the Northeast.

“We’re already looking into expanding into local universities, including the University of Rochester and Monroe Community College,” said Shilman.

“It’s wonderful to see the success Mark-Anthony and Anatoly have achieved in such a short period of time,” remarked Dean Thomas Hopkins. “RIT’s Undergraduate Business Plan Competition is designed to give students a leg up in establishing their own business ventures. I’m thrilled to see that these students have been able to leverage this opportunity.”

The COB business plan competition is an annual event in which RIT students are invited to submit their ideas for a new business venture. Winners, selected by a panel of RIT faculty members and alumni entrepreneurs, are chosen on a basis of the realistic prospects for the plan, compelling nature of the market potential, clear definition of the target market, and accurate understanding of start-up costs and revenues.

Faculty Column

Dr. Richard DeMartino, Assistant Professor of Management, has been selected to serve as a member of the steering board for the inaugural Rochester Regional Business Plan Contest. The contest, co-sponsored by RIT, High Tech Rochester, the University of Rochester, Greater Rochester Enterprises and Infotronics Technology Center will be awarding a total of $75,000 to three winning business plans submitted by local entrepreneurs.

Dr. Eugene Fram, J.Warren McClure Research Professor of Marketing, was quoted in The New York Times on September 9, 2004. Fram’s comments were in reference to Wal-Mart’s renewed efforts to repair their corporate image, and can be found in the column titled “At Wal-Mart, the New Word Is Compromise.”

Dr. Thomas D. Hopkins, Dean, is serving as a consultant on a U.S. Small Business Administration study of regulatory burdens facing small American business.

Dr. Daniel Joseph, Associate Professor of Management Information Systems, hosted the Western New York SAP Users Group meeting on the RIT campus last September. The SAP Users Group meets four times per year to discuss best practices in implementing and negotiating SAP software.

Dr. Thomas Pray, Professor and Chair of the Department of Decision Sciences and Management Information Systems, delivered a training seminar based upon his business simulation program, DECIDE II, to employees at Cadence Design Systems during a recent trip to Scotland.

Gelsomino discussed the history of Perkins Restaurant & Bakery in Rochester, as well as the state of the restaurant industry overall, a huge category which is currently experiencing dramatic growth and realignment. Pictured above is Gelsomino with members of the Business Leaders of Tomorrow student organization, Michael Murphy, Alexander Nguyen, Christian Davies, and Robert Beucler.
